

Fitting the Fetters on an Ancient Enemy

The photograph in the upper left hand corner shows flood waters passing through the conduits of the Germantown dam. Immediately under this are two views of the conduits and the hydraulic jump. Below are two photos showing processes in the building of the earthen dams, described in the article on the opposite page. The photograph at the bottom gives an impression of the massiveness of the dams.

